Effective leaders must be prepared to handle major crises and understand the psychology that is embedded in crisis-related events. Collaboration skills and the ability to build systems for information sharing are essential. The goal of this Collaborative Leadership in Homeland Security course is to provide homeland security leaders with high level critical thinking and collaborative leadership skills.

Prerequisites

This executive level training designed for mid- and high-level decision makers from state and local agencies, tribal nations, private and corporate sectors, emergency managers and planners, first responders, law enforcement and health officials.

Participants must have solid personal computer skills and feel comfortable navigating the internet.

Objectives

At the end of this course participants will be able to:

- Collaborate across jurisdictional lines to integrate their critical missions
- Explain the physical and psychological impact of a crisis on individuals, including the potential adverse impact on crisis behavior and crisis response efficacy
- Identify personal strengths in crisis situations and manage relationships before, during and after a crisis
- Communicate across a wide array of communities and organizational structures, using their leaderships skills
- Develop a preparedness culture that will foster the partnerships necessary to share goals and align capabilities
